FOR ENCINITAS
NP4E

Introduction

The NP4E plant list was developed to provide a curated selection of native plants that support biodiversity, enhance local ecosystems, and align with the unique environmental needs of San Diego County and Encinitas. This list serves as a practical resource for city staff, designers, architects, landscapers, gardeners, and Encinitas residents who are creating resilient, wildlife-friendly landscapes.

How the NP4E Plant List Was Developed

1. We filtered native plants, including their cultivars and selections, based on nursery availability from Calscape and manually refined the list to focus on those suitable for San Diego County.
2. Native plants that are local to Encinitas but not yet available in nurseries were added. These plants are vital for local ecosystems and could be produced by botanical gardens or native plant nurseries on demand.
3. Finally, we removed plants that are problematic or unsuitable for gardens.

Keystone Plants and Why They Matter

Keystone plants, especially California oaks, cherries, willows, and wild lilacs, are vital native species that support most local wildlife by hosting insects like caterpillars. These plants form the foundation of food webs, sustaining birds, bats, and other animals. In urban environments, they bridge habitat gaps, create pockets of biodiversity, and support ecosystem resilience.

Integrating keystone plants into urban landscapes—such as parks, streetscapes, and gardens—enhances both ecological and aesthetic value. For planners, designers, and citizens, using keystone plants offers a chance to create spaces that are functional, sustainable, and beneficial for both people and wildlife.

Keystone plants in this list are marked as follows:

-  Supports more than 100 species of butterflies and moths
-  Supports 50–100 species of butterflies and moths
-  Supports 15–50 species of butterflies and moths

Highly local native plants to Encinitas are marked with a  to emphasize their importance in preserving the region's biodiversity.
